CHOOSE A TIBCS BREEDER

Deciding to add a kitten as an integral part of the family is a huge decision. The choice shouldn't be made on a whim or based on the kitten's cuteness.

Most people prefer the opportunity to interact with kittens first and become familiar with how they are raised prior to making a decision.

Most want to be provided with a good contract protecting both kitten and buyer. This, and love for the kitten, will provide a solid foundation for the Bengal to begin life in your family. Having opportunity to visit breeders provides you with an insight to health risks and lets you personally view the kitten's environment and see the kitten's ability to interact and socialize with you.

Many Bengal breeders will often become lifetime friends, mentoring and assisting you with direction as your pet travels through its life.

TIBCS recommends you investigate if a breeder or their cattery is a member of a credible breed organization such as TIBCS, requiring strict adherence to a Code of Ethics, and if they have signed that Code of Ethics.

Any investment in a Bengal kitten or cat by you as an individual will be as good as the research, time, quality, and care you give to it.

The "snows" come in several color variations; seal lynx point, seal mink, and seal sepia are the most common snows. They express a light background with markings from charcoal gray to light and dark brown shades. Contrast between the background and markings can vary greatly depending on the individual cat, as can eye color. Blue eyes are allowed only on the lynx point. The newest color of Bengal to be accepted is the striking silver.

The fun of owning a Bengal cat often begins with a kitten. Yet, one of the many fun traits of the Bengal breed is they lose their playful, inquisitive, kitten-like personality as adults. You will often find them up to kittenish antics even into maturty, making the Bengal a wonderful breed whether you're considering a kitten or an adult. You may wish to adopt a retired breeding cat from a reputable breeder or a rescue from one of several Bengal rescue organizations. They need love too!

THIS BROCHURE IS COURTESY OF THE FOLLOWING TIBCS MEMBER:

often do not

Bengal Cat

The In

The International Bengal Cat Society, Inc.

Please come visit us at:

www.tibcs.com

C) The International Bengal Cat Society, Inc.

The Bengal is a medium to large domestic feline that originates from crossing the small Asian Leopard Cat (ALC) to the domestic cat, creating a companion with an exotic look and a friendly temperament.

ALCs are beautiful and exotic

it is not a pet.

looking animals, roughly the same size as the average housecat. They vary in coloration and markings depending upon the sub-species. The ALC has played an important role in the Bengal breed's creation, but

Four or five generations after breeding Bengal-to-Bengal, the Bengal breed is recognized for championship competition by most international domestic cat associations, including TICA, ACFA, GCCF, FIFe, and AACE.

The Bengal's beautiful coat makes it stand out in a crowd. Shades of brown, orange, sand, buff, silver, > or ivory make up the background color. Some Bengal patterns display striking rosettes, spots, or swirls made up of more than one color, usually a secondary color forming a dark outlining of the pattern.

The Bengal cat can be spotted or marbled. The marbled pattern is created by the combination of rosettes from the ALC and the domestic classic tabby pattern, producing a "marbleized" look with one or more colors swirled into the base colors.

Ideally, both spotted and marbled patterns should have a horizontal flow rather than a vertical appearance. Since the original goal of the Bengal breeder was to capture the look of the exotic spotted ALC, the dominant spotted pattern is most common.

The Bengal cat is active and has a happy, interactive, and extremely intelligent personality. Every domestic cat breed has its unique features, and the exotic heritage of the Bengal cat can be seen in its every day activities. While Bengals will happily search out on a lap or stretch out on the sofa next to you during naptime, they are very active during the rest of the time.

The energetic Bengal is not for people who want a leopard cat decoration. Whether playing in their water bowls, fetching a ball for their families, taking walks on a leash, or leaping to the top of the highest cupboards, Bengals are constantly on the move. Bengals are perfect for those who want to interact and play with their cat daily. Like many other varieties of pet, the Bengal cat demands a good deal of attention and affection and enjoys being an integral part of the family.

The International Bengal Cat Society, Inc. (TIBCS) is a society of Bengal enthusiasts who are proud to bring this exquisite feline, Bengal information, and breeders to the web at www.tibcs.com. We hope you will share our excitement over this rapidly developing breed.

Or visit our web site at

